A Coventry cafe owner is celebrating not only his first year in business - but being named one of the country's top coffee shops.

Since opening Kahawa Cafe in New Union Street, owner Bally Bhambra has seen his venture featured in a book of the top 50 coffee shops, had the business included in a blogger's calendar and won an online award - beating some of the industry's biggest names.

“It has been a fantastic first year for us. Obviously, starting up a new business has presented a number of challenges, but to have achieved so much within the first 12 months has been amazing,” said Bally.

“I think one of the highlights was winning the online coffee award which saw us beat the likes of Kaffein in London, Taylor Street Baristas and Boston Tea Party, which is incredible.

“I feel very proud that we have done so well. But it is not just for myself, these achievements are fantastic for the city as Coventry can now say it has one of the country's best coffee shops.”
